On May 5, 2011, Deputy Hoosock and Deputy Quku responded to the Central New York Regional Transportation Center, where they were confronted by an armed gunman who pulled what appeared to be a .357 Magnum from his waistband. Both deputies, along with a City of Syracuse Police Officer, were forced to draw and discharge their service weapons to protect themselves and others in the area.

Sheriff Walsh expressed, "This is very well deserved; the display of exceptional judgment in dealing with such an unpredictable and potentially deadly situation defines their commitment to our community."
